Origins of The Myer Foundation

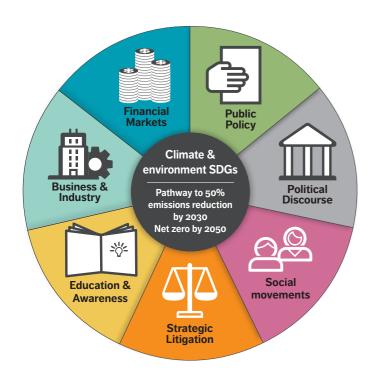

The Myer Foundation was established in 1959 by Sidney Myer's sons, the late Kenneth Myer AC DSC, and Baillieu Myer AC, as a way to support initiatives and new opportunities arising from contemporary issues. The Myer Foundation was endowed through Kenneth Myer's estate following his death in 1992.

A Sustainable Future

Environmental Sustainability is one of The Myer Foundation and Sidney Myer Fund's five core values while addressing climate change is one of the two abiding themes of the FY19–23 strategic plan (the other being inequality).

The United Nation's Sustainable Development Goals can help us achieve a better and more sustainable future. The Myer Foundation acknowledges that we all have an imperative to limit global warming through achieving net zero emissions by 2050.

The Myer Foundation is pursuing climate action and environmental sustainability goals across its portfolio of grantmaking and investment activities. Funded organisations use a variety of levers including financial markets, political discourse, social movements, public policy, education and awareness, business and industry, and strategic litigation as pathways to effect systemic change.

The Myer Foundation President's Address

This has been a year in which we have all faced many challenges. It has been a year in which TMF's focus on climate change and innovation has felt particularly appropriate. It was the year in which the Kenneth Myer Innovation Fellowships were renamed to acknowledge my father, the late Kenneth Myer AC, DSC. The change of name, to be applied prospectively, is part of a suite of measures to reflect the impact of Ken's vision and legacy of forward thinking, progressive and courageous philanthropy and on his co-founding and endowing The Myer Foundation.

We recognise climate change as one of the most pressing challenges facing our global community. FY20 saw TMF build a portfolio approach to grantmaking on climate action and environmental sustainability by funding diverse but complementary means to effecting change. The portfolio maps out key levers - such as strategic litigation and financial markets - and the organisations that can drive policy and decision makers to act. It sees TMF continue its support of ClimateWorks while also championing the newly merged Environmental Defenders Office.

FY20 was the year in which we took the important first steps in establishing an independent, national water and catchment policy centre to catalyse transformative change in the management of Australia's freshwater systems and catchments. The Myer Foundation and The Ian Potter Foundation have each committed $5 million over ten years towards the centre (and raised in excess of a further $20 million), which seeks to improve how policy decisions are made about water management by working collaboratively with governments and key stakeholders through the use of meaningful and well-designed deliberative processes. Philanthropy is ideally placed to support the dissemination of evidence-informed, disinterested approaches to public policy and this centre will be critical to our shared success in addressing water security.

Consistent with TMF's beyond grantmaking strategic pillar, TMF resolved to invest 100 percent of its corpus in either environmentally sustainable, social and governance - so called ESG investments - by the 2022 TMF Annual General Meeting, with 90 percent of the portfolio to be invested or committed in accordance with this strategy by December 2020. We can all do more than award grants in support of our philanthropy and we are keen to explore how our approach might inform other trusts and foundations in enlivening their investment portfolios to meet the challenges we face as a global community.

As many of you know, on 26 November I step down as President of TMF. It has been a great privilege to lead TMF these past 11 years and I am proud of the Foundation's achievements over this most recent period. My term commenced with the 2009 Commemorative Grants Program, which saw a series of impactful grants made across our community, but perhaps none more impactful than the creation of ClimateWorks Australia. ClimateWorks was founded to help bridge the gap between climate research and action. Recognising this need, The Myer Foundation and Monash University partnered to create a new, independent not-for-profit, working within the Monash Sustainable Development Institute. For the past decade ClimateWorks has played a unique role in Australia's transition towards a net zero future. Climate change is the most pressing challenge facing us as a species. It's not our planet that's in trouble; it's us. The planet will survive in some form, but we won't if humanity doesn't successfully address the climate change challenge. TMF's persistent focus on addressing climate change continues to evolve and explore new and innovative ways to effect positive change in the face of dire consequences. From the creation of ClimateWorks to the restructuring of TMF's investment portfolio with a view to achieving strong financial returns in alignment with environmental, social and governance goals, our thinking has continued to explore new solutions to this wicked problem.

Martyn Myer AO President

The Myer Foundation CEO's Introduction

During these past 11 years TMF has helped support some genuinely positive social change in our country. Our focus on legal, civil and human rights has resulted in support for organisations such as the Human Rights Law Centre, which uses strategic legal action, policy solutions and advocacy to support people and communities to eliminate inequality and injustice and build a fairer, more compassionate Australia. It has also afforded us to be one of the first large philanthropic entities to support marriage equality publicly and financially.

I'd like to thank my fellow Directors for their work over these past 11 years and congratulate Rupert Myer AO on his election as President of TMF. I look forward to TMF continuing to act decisively and progressively to address our most complex challenges with innovative and successorientated thinking. I would also like to congratulate John Daley on his appointment to the TMF board and thank Leonard Vary, CEO of The Myer Foundation and Sidney Myer Fund and his outstanding team for their sector-leading work.

This has been a very difficult year for many in our community and our recovery from the bushfire crisis and the global pandemic will take many years. That recovery would not be possible without the dedicated individuals working in the not-for-profit sector and I extend my thanks to them for their tireless work.

FY20 has seen a series of cascading crises hit Australia. Now, more than ever, our community needs leadership. We need leadership that is fit-forpurpose, that is supple when it needs to be and resolute when required. It is time to lean in to our values, to those qualities and attributes which define us and exist outside of reporting timelines. I am grateful for the work that TMF Directors and SMF Trustees have previously completed with Myer family members to settle our values of Leadership, Creativity, Environmental Sustainability, Integrity, and Equality; those values continue to guide our efforts to meet the challenges we face.

TMF's establishment of the water and catchment policy centre this year is one such example of TMF's leadership in action. This new centre will be a crucial pillar in propagating an evidence-informed discussion regarding one of our most precious resources. I am delighted to have seen this initiative, which is being created by a collaboration of more than a dozen philanthropic funders large and small from all over Australia, materially progress towards its funding target and the appointment of a chair, board and CEO.

Prior to the onset of the global pandemic the priority theme for TMF Directors' grantmaking was human, civil and legal rights. In the context of an emergency such as COVID-19 there can be a tendency for some issues to be considered other-than-urgent and therefore peripheral and put aside. A particularly important role for TMF at a time of considerable limitations on liberties and freedoms will be to maintain its focus on the agreed theme and I am pleased to have seen that focus persist.

TMF Directors' support of Fair Agenda in this financial year represents a material investment in a campaigning and advocacy organisation focused on the safety, economic security, and agency of all women over their lives and bodies. Such a grant is emblematic of our organisations strategic pillar and SMF/TMF's Equality value.

I'd like to acknowledge and thank Martyn Myer AO for all that has been achieved under his Presidency of TMF. Martyn has a perspicacious and inquisitive mind and an intolerance for injustice wherever it might be found. His oversight of the redevelopment of VCA's Southbank campus, his persistent and vocal support for marriage equality, and the multi-year funding of the Grattan Institute's pursuit of independent, rigorous and practical solutions to Australia's most pressing problems are prime examples of his leadership. My congratulations to Rupert Myer AO on his prospective election to the presidency - my team and I look forward to working with Rupert over the coming years and continuing TMF's legacy of bold and impactful philanthropy.

My thanks to the talented and hardworking team at Bennetts Lane and to the dedicated and passionate for-purpose sector people and organisations which feature in this report. I commend the work of these committed individuals to you and suggest that in this time of great need we find whatever means we can to support their extraordinary efforts.

Vale Professor Harry Simon

The first grant made by The Myer Foundation in 1959 supported the establishment of the Chair of Oriental Studies at the University of Melbourne. This prescient and pioneering initiative would establish the direction of so much that was to follow for The Myer Foundation and Sidney Myer Fund.

Harry Felix Simon: 13 September 1923 – 7 July 2019

Professor Harry Felix Simon, who led Chinese studies at the University of Melbourne for a remarkable 27 years, was born in Berlin on September 13, 1923.

In 1959, The Myer Foundation made a generous grant, including the purchase of a building, to enable the University of Melbourne to establish a new department of oriental studies. Harry was appointed its foundation professor in 1961. The programs Harry devised followed the London/SOAS model with a first year of intensive language priming followed by three years' immersion in literary texts – modern, medieval and classical – as well as contemporary material from mainland Chinese newspapers.

Harry believed university programs in Asian languages should include grounding in the literature as well as cultural background on the historical, political and sociological contexts – an approach thought "traditionalist" by then, when language education was increasingly prioritising communication competencies. From 1965, Japanese was added to the department's offerings, and from 1971, it also incorporated Indonesian and Malayan studies.

Despite its small size, the department punched far above its weight. Its Chinese studies alumni from 1961 to 1988 include an ambassador to Beijing, a consul-general to Shanghai, heads of mission in countries other than China as well as many Foreign Affairs officers at other levels. One was the official interpreter for successive Australian prime ministers from Bob Hawke to John Howard.

Harry chaired the department for an unprecedented 27 years. He was associate dean and dean of the faculty of arts between 1966 and 1977. Elected to the University Council, he served vigorously on faculty and council committees and was provice-chancellor from 1979 to 1980. He promoted Chinese cultural activities in Melbourne, organising an exhibition of Modern Chinese Art in 1974, and took a keen interest in the Melbourne Theatre Company, serving on its council, too.

Upon retirement, Harry made his home in Toorak, Melbourne. In 2009, he donated his large collection of Chinese books to the university – more than 1000 items in all dating from the 1880s on, the result of a lifetime of research and collecting – a substantial resource for later generations. His wife, Margo, died in May 2010. Harry died peacefully, aged 95 years, at his nursing home in Melbourne on July 7, 2019.

By Andrew Endrey, Christopher Nailer and Carol Simon.

The authors were students of Chinese at the University of Melbourne between 1970 and 1981. Andrew and Christopher also tutored there. Carol is the third generation of Simons to study Chinese.

Kenneth Myer Innovation Fellowships

2019 Kenneth Myer Innovation Fellow Dr Eve Lester

The Kenneth Myer Innovation Fellowships afford the crème of Australia's social and environmental innovators a year in which to develop a ground breaking idea into a sustainable plan for action, or to take an early stage project to the next level. The Myer Foundation supports one Fellowship each year, within the broad definitions of sustainability and environment or human, civil and legal rights. Over the past seven years Fellowship projects have included exploration of justice reinvestment aimed at reducing First Nations imprisonment, work to strengthen constituencybased community organising in the climate movement, a social enterprise employing a new approach to training disability support workers, and growing the ecosystem for plant-based food innovations. In an era of increasing forced migration around the world, we are delighted that the Fellowship supported by TMF in FY20 will develop a mobile app to facilitate monitoring of the conditions of immigration detention.

Each year the Fellowships are keenly sought after and this year was no different, with over 460 Expressions of Interest submitted. As Co-Convenors we are joined and supported in the task of selecting each year's Fellow by a stellar committee, comprised of Andrew Myer AM, Prof John Daley, Jan Owen AM and Kathryn Fagg AO. We are grateful for their insightful contributions, and to the members of the Kenneth Myer Innovation Fellowship Support Panel, Oliver Roydhouse, Clare Harding and Quentin Miller. Thanks also to CEO Leonard Vary and the team.

Sustainability & Environment Program

The green tree frog is just one of thousands of species the Environmental Defenders Office is fighting for. Photo: Nick Watts Sustainability & Environment grantmaking was considered in the challenging circumstances of the COVID-19 crisis and the risk that key decision and policymakers would be distracted from the urgent actions that must be taken to achieve net zero emissions by 2050. The benefit of awarding multi-year untied support to organisations demonstrating consistent and scaleable impact was never clearer. In pursuit of our focus area to support organisations that seek to influence key stakeholders to take action on climate change, the Committee has taken a portfolio approach to grantmaking, and we are pleased that two organisations taking different but complementary approaches to climate action were funded.

Grants were awarded to the Australian Youth Climate Coalition (AYCC) and the Investor Group on Climate Change (IGCC). The Committee recognised AYCC's goal to build a social movement of young people and the importance of giving them agency over and a voice in relation to climate action. IGCC's work with its constituency of institutional investors demonstrates investment as a key lever to effect change.

Our thanks to fellow Committee members Adelaide Badgery, Martyn Myer AO, David Shelmerdine, Lindy Shelmerdine, John Connor and Dr John Spierings for their work in FY20. We were pleased to welcome David back to the Committee this year and to be joined by John Connor and John Spierings. We would like to thank CEO Leonard Vary and Program Manager Jane Thomas and the team at Bennetts Lane for their support and assistance over the past year.

Mental Health Program

Reach Foundation

The Mental Health Committee was formed at the 2013 fourth generation Retreat. Delegated with the authority to act on behalf of the G4 cohort, the Committee's grantmaking focus rests on upstream interventionist activities and programs in the youth mental health sector.

Each year, the Committee seeks to balance its grantmaking across program delivery and research initiatives and looks to award multiple grants in support of large and small organisations.

In response to the 2019-20 Australian bushfire crisis, the Mental Health Committee sought to prioritise communities affected by the bushfires in the coming years' grantmaking rounds. Reaching these communities became even more difficult once the COVID-19 social distancing regulations were introduced. This difficulty only strengthened our resolve however as the challenges created by the bushfire crisis have not disappeared nor can they be deprioritised in the face of this new catastrophe. The COVID-19 crisis will significantly impact bushfire victims. By addressing its funding to those communities already in distress, the Mental Health Committee aims to help alleviate the suffering created by this new emergency. In adopting this strategy, the Committee was able to provide some ongoing support to Murdoch Children's Research Institute,

The Man Cave and Reach Foundation in FY20, with further capacity reserved to help support bushfire-affected communities in the year to come.

We'd like to thank our fellow Committee members Laura Richards, Nell Golden, Jessica Myer, Jemima Myer, and Kristen Douglas for their dedication and their counsel. Further thanks to Leonard Vary, Neal Harvey and the team at Bennetts Lane for their assistance with our grantmaking activities as we look forward to another impactful year assisting the dedicated individuals and organisations which make up Australia's not-for-profit sector.

Family Grants Program

The Family Grants Program is an initiative of The Myer Foundation designed to support charities and encourage charitable giving through Myer family member philanthropy. The Program recognises cash donations to charities and, for those family members of The Myer Foundation 35 and under, time spent volunteering.

Funds approved match family member giving on a dollar for dollar basis and recognise the value of members' volunteer time working in an organisation, or participation as a member of an organisation's board or committee of management.
