

QUOLL

There are 4 species of quoll.

The Eastern Quoll and Northern Quoll are listed as Endangered, while the Spotted-Tail Quoll and Western Quoll are listed as Near Threatened.

Quolls generally shelter in dens during the day and hunt alone at night.

Being marsupials, quoll young spend the first part of their lives in their mother's pouch.

Some quolls can climb high into trees to capture prey, including tree-roosting, sleeping birds.
